Sioux City Journal, 29: Fearing an epidemic of spinal meningitis following the second attack of the disease in the home of Lester Farin, the South Sioux City board of education yesterday closed the three public schools. Hayes Farin, the small son of Lester Farin, died from spinal meningitis last Tuesday, and Mabel, another Farin child, recently suffered an attack of the disease. One of the grade schools and the high school probably will be opened today, but the South school, where the Farin children attended, will remain closed indefinitely until it is ascertained whether any of the children were exposed to the disease. "We are not expecting an epidemic of spinal meningitis," said F. W. Rice, superintendent of schools, last night. "The disease is at present confined to the one family and the board of health is confident that it will not spread. The closing of the schools was a purely precautionary measure, since there was a chance that some of the children might have been exposed before the Farin family was quarantined. We hope to open the high school and the North school Tuesday, but the South school will remain closed for at least a week. This will keep about 140 pupils out of school for that time, but we hope to have them all back in school within a short time."

Sioux City Tribune, 28: The churches in South Sioux City were closed last night and the public schools there were closed today, as a result of a spinal meningitis scare. Thus far the deadly disease has confined itself in one home, but steps of precaution were taken yesterday, when the sister of a little boy who died last week of the disease, developed a similar case. Several hundred children will be out of school for at least a week in South Sioux City, and all cases of public meeting will be closed. The present victim is 12-year-old Mabel Serin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Serin. Although in a very critical condition, the attending physicians still hope to save the child's life. Her brother, Hayes Serin, died last Wednesday of spinal meningitis and was buried Friday. Mabel has been ill for about a week but the spinal meningitis did not appear until yesterday. Dr. L. De Vore, of South Sioux City, and Dr. R. M. Waters, of Chicago, who is attending the practice of Dr. C. A. Katherman, while the latter is in Europe, attended the case. The doctors were unable to procure serum in Sioux City and telephoned to Minneapolis for a quantity of it. It was rushed to South Sioux City today and, with it, the physicians still hope to save the girl's life. She rested fairly easy last night, according to reports from the home. The situation in South Sioux City is serious but not dangerous, said the doctors today. Drastic steps to prevent the spread of the disease were taken immediately following the discovery of the second case.
